Carl awoke, one morning on the beach of a country named Brozil, deep in the heart of the Amazone forest. Carl realized that he had not earned any money in the Amazone, and had stayed there much longer than he had originally intended. After many trials and tribulations Carl found a pirate ship captained by the famous pirate Red Feather at the Pirate's Bay. Captain Red Feather was willing to give Carl a lift back to his home town of Camp-Melon. Carl then began his journey home so he could attend his looming court day, and hopefully make some money to pay his fines before that day.

Bob Van Starr presents: The Clip Issue of Callow Corvus

This is a collection of one-page Carl shorts, and a few older stories. They call this in the biz a clip-show. Carl is currently busy starring in his Graphic Novel The Moldy Pail, which should be available by Fall of 2020.
My Best, Bob

Whimsical One Ball
Hey Carl. Try out this Whimsical-One ball it knows the future.
Caw?
Knows the future huh?
Oh whimsical one ball, will I ever be rich and successful?
That can't be right?
NO
Oh, Whimsical one ball are you sure?
I refuse to let a plastic toy dictate my future. Unless it's a good one!
YES
THROW!
Yup, that just really hurt my foot.

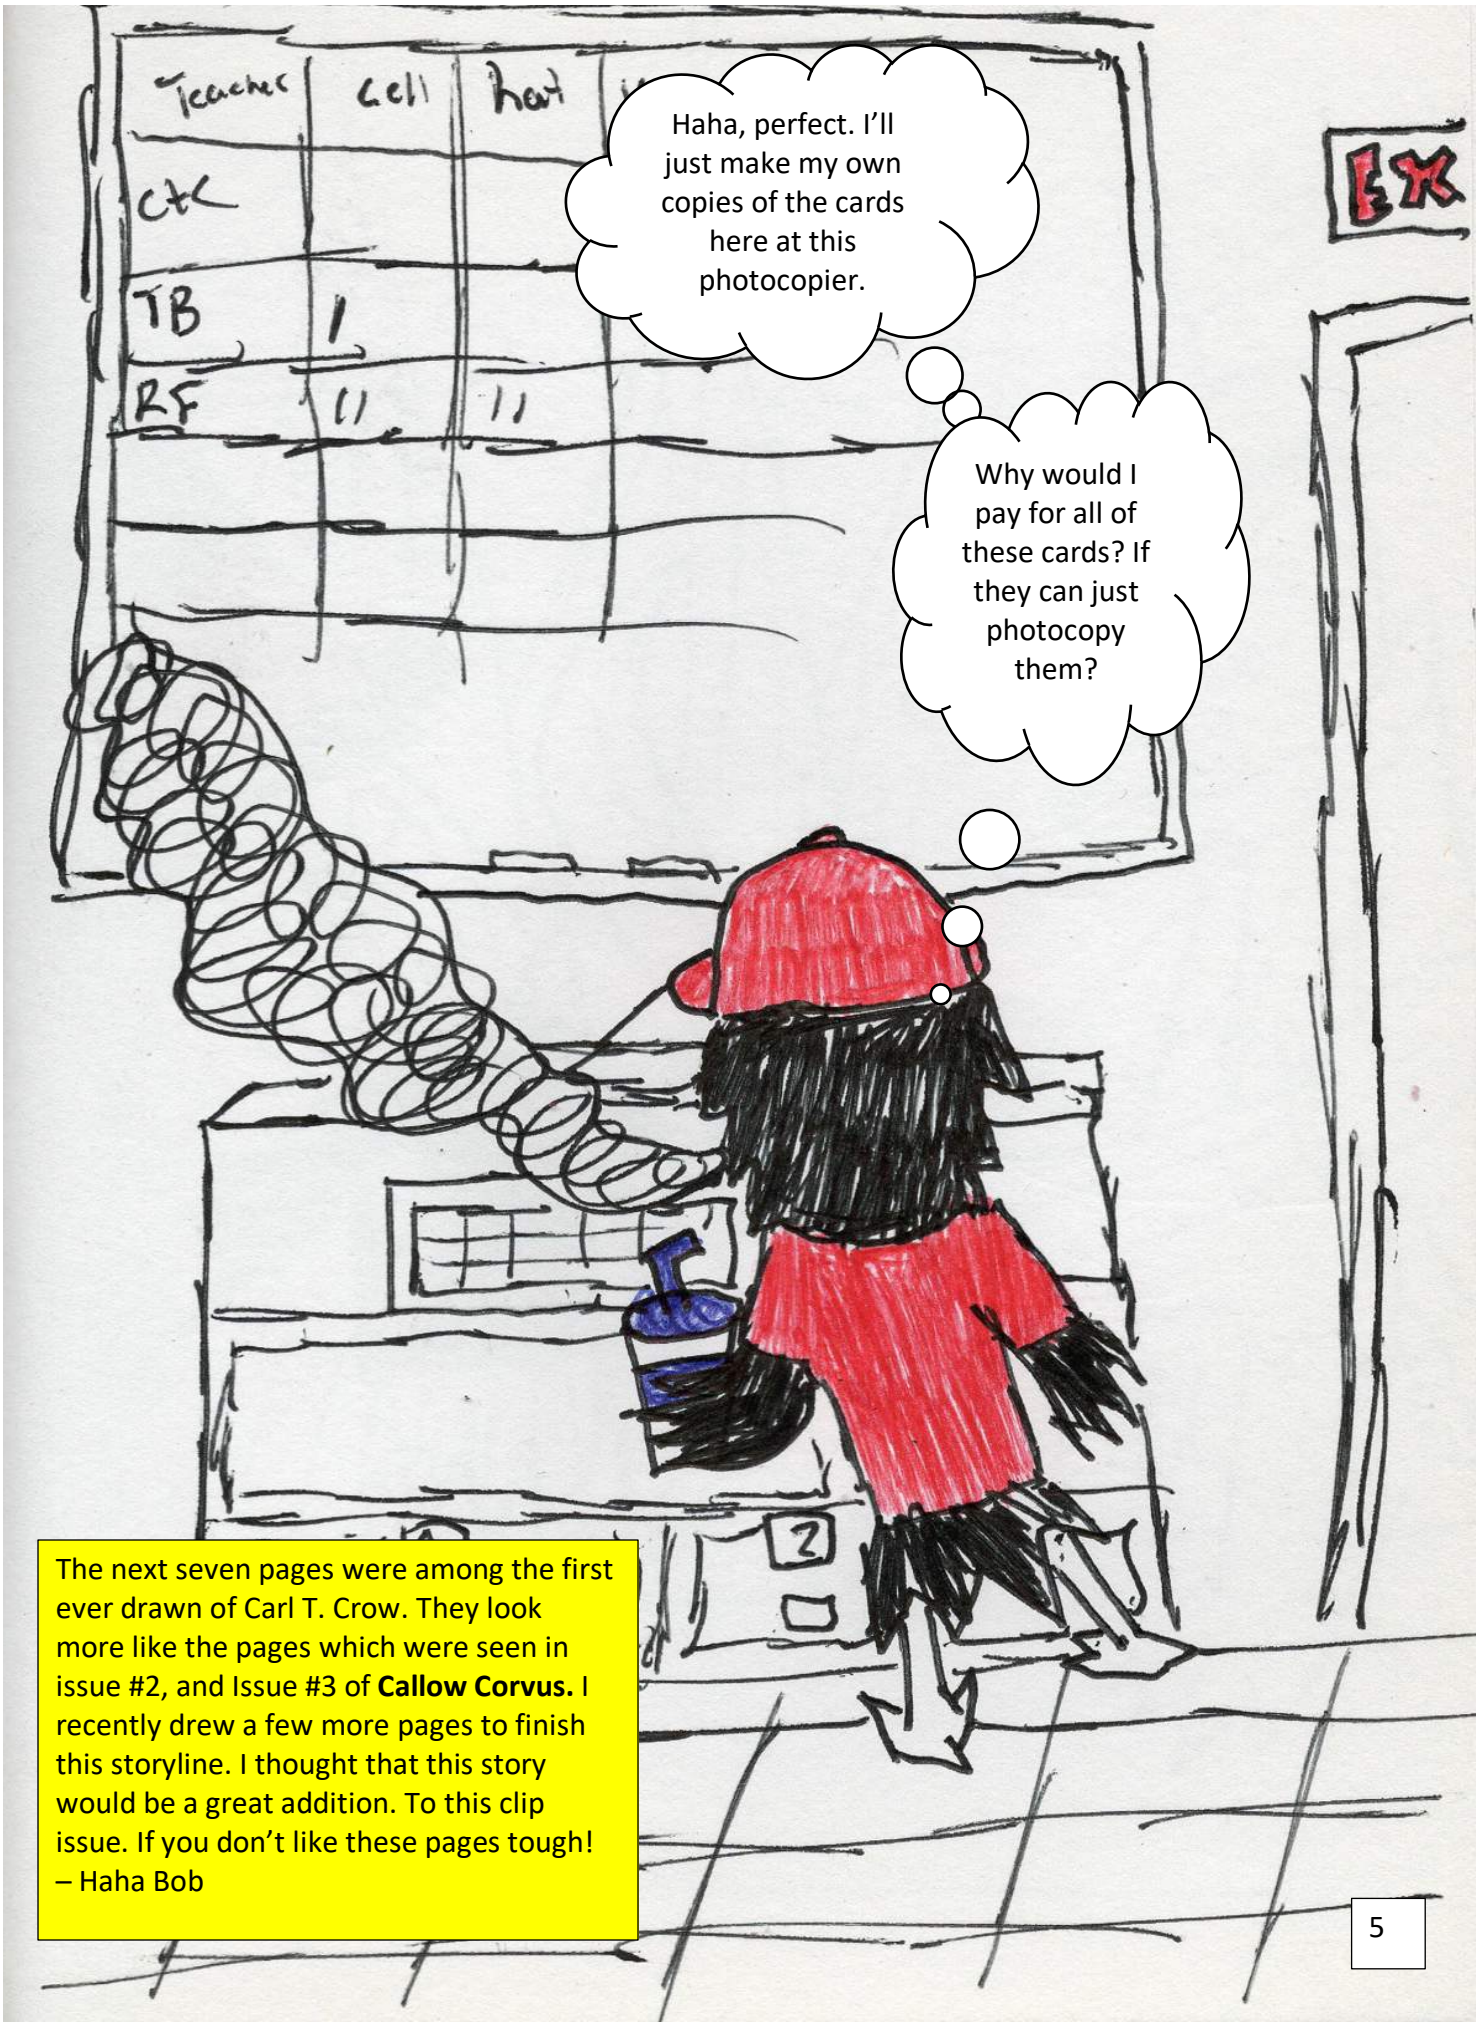
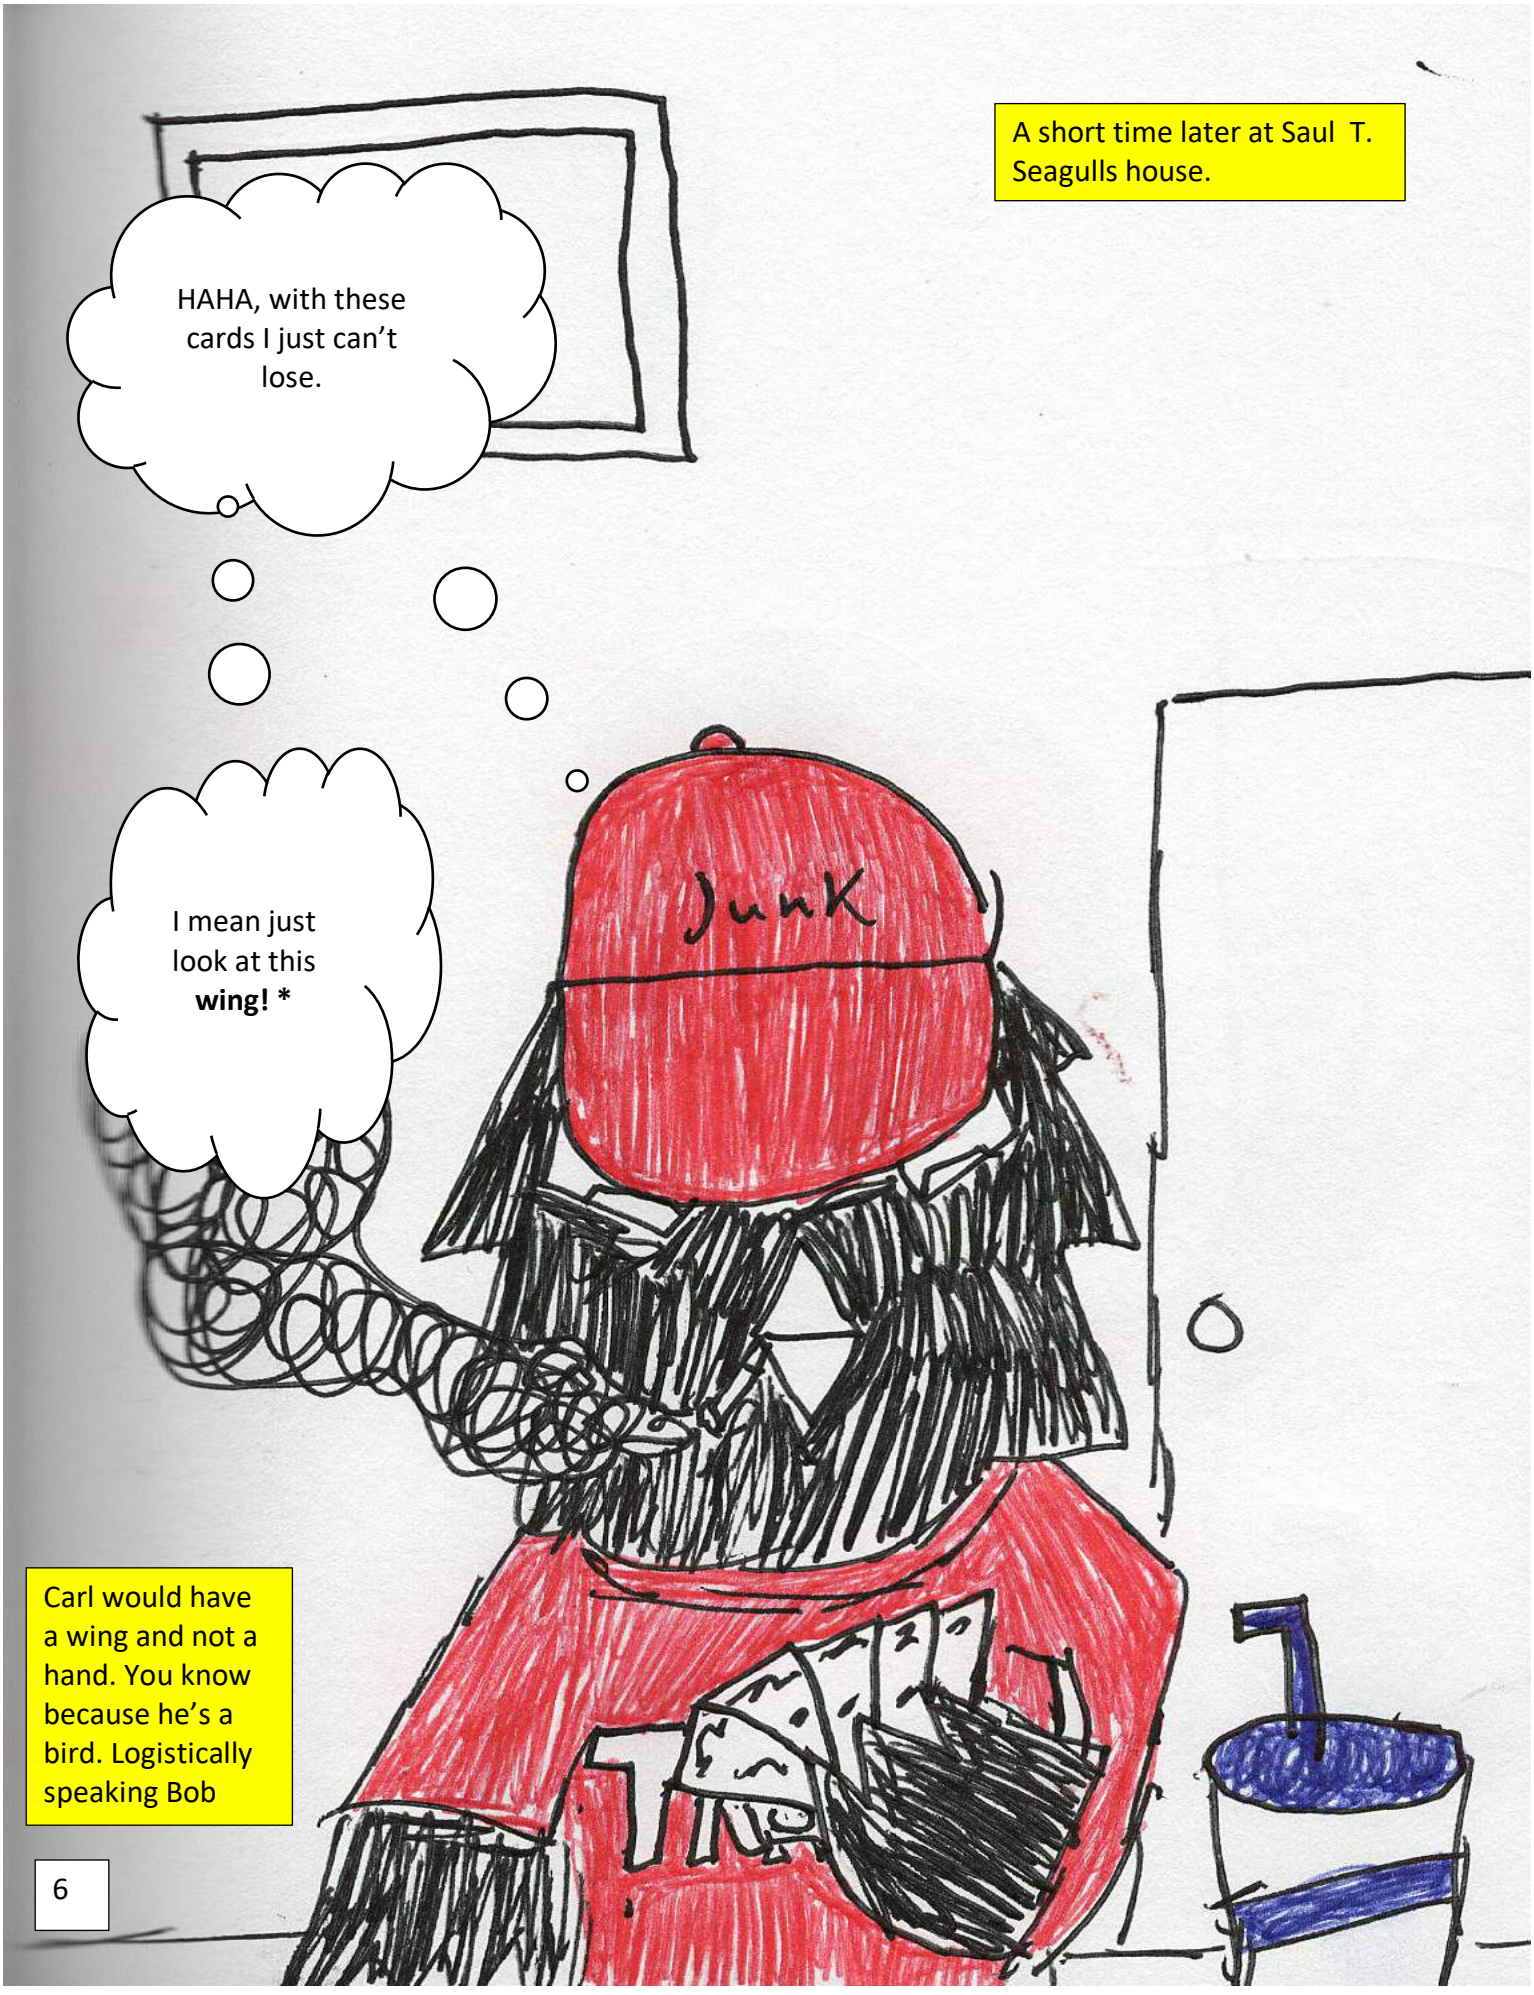
Carl The Crow in: Ordinary The Hoarding.

Ordinary The Hoarding is the addictive collectible card game, that takes regular household items, and turns them into addictive pieces of printed cardboard.
If only there was some way I could have really good cards
Without having to pay for all of those card's I'd need to be great.
I think I've got it!
Junk
TRASH



The next seven pages were among the first ever drawn of Carl T. Crow. They look more like the pages which were seen in issue #2, and Issue #3 of Callow Corvus. I recently drew a few more pages to finish this storyline. I thought that this story would be a great addition. To this clip issue. If you don't like these pages tough! – Haha Bob



A short time later at Saul T. Seagulls house.
HAHA, with these cards I just can't lose.
I mean just look at this wing! ***
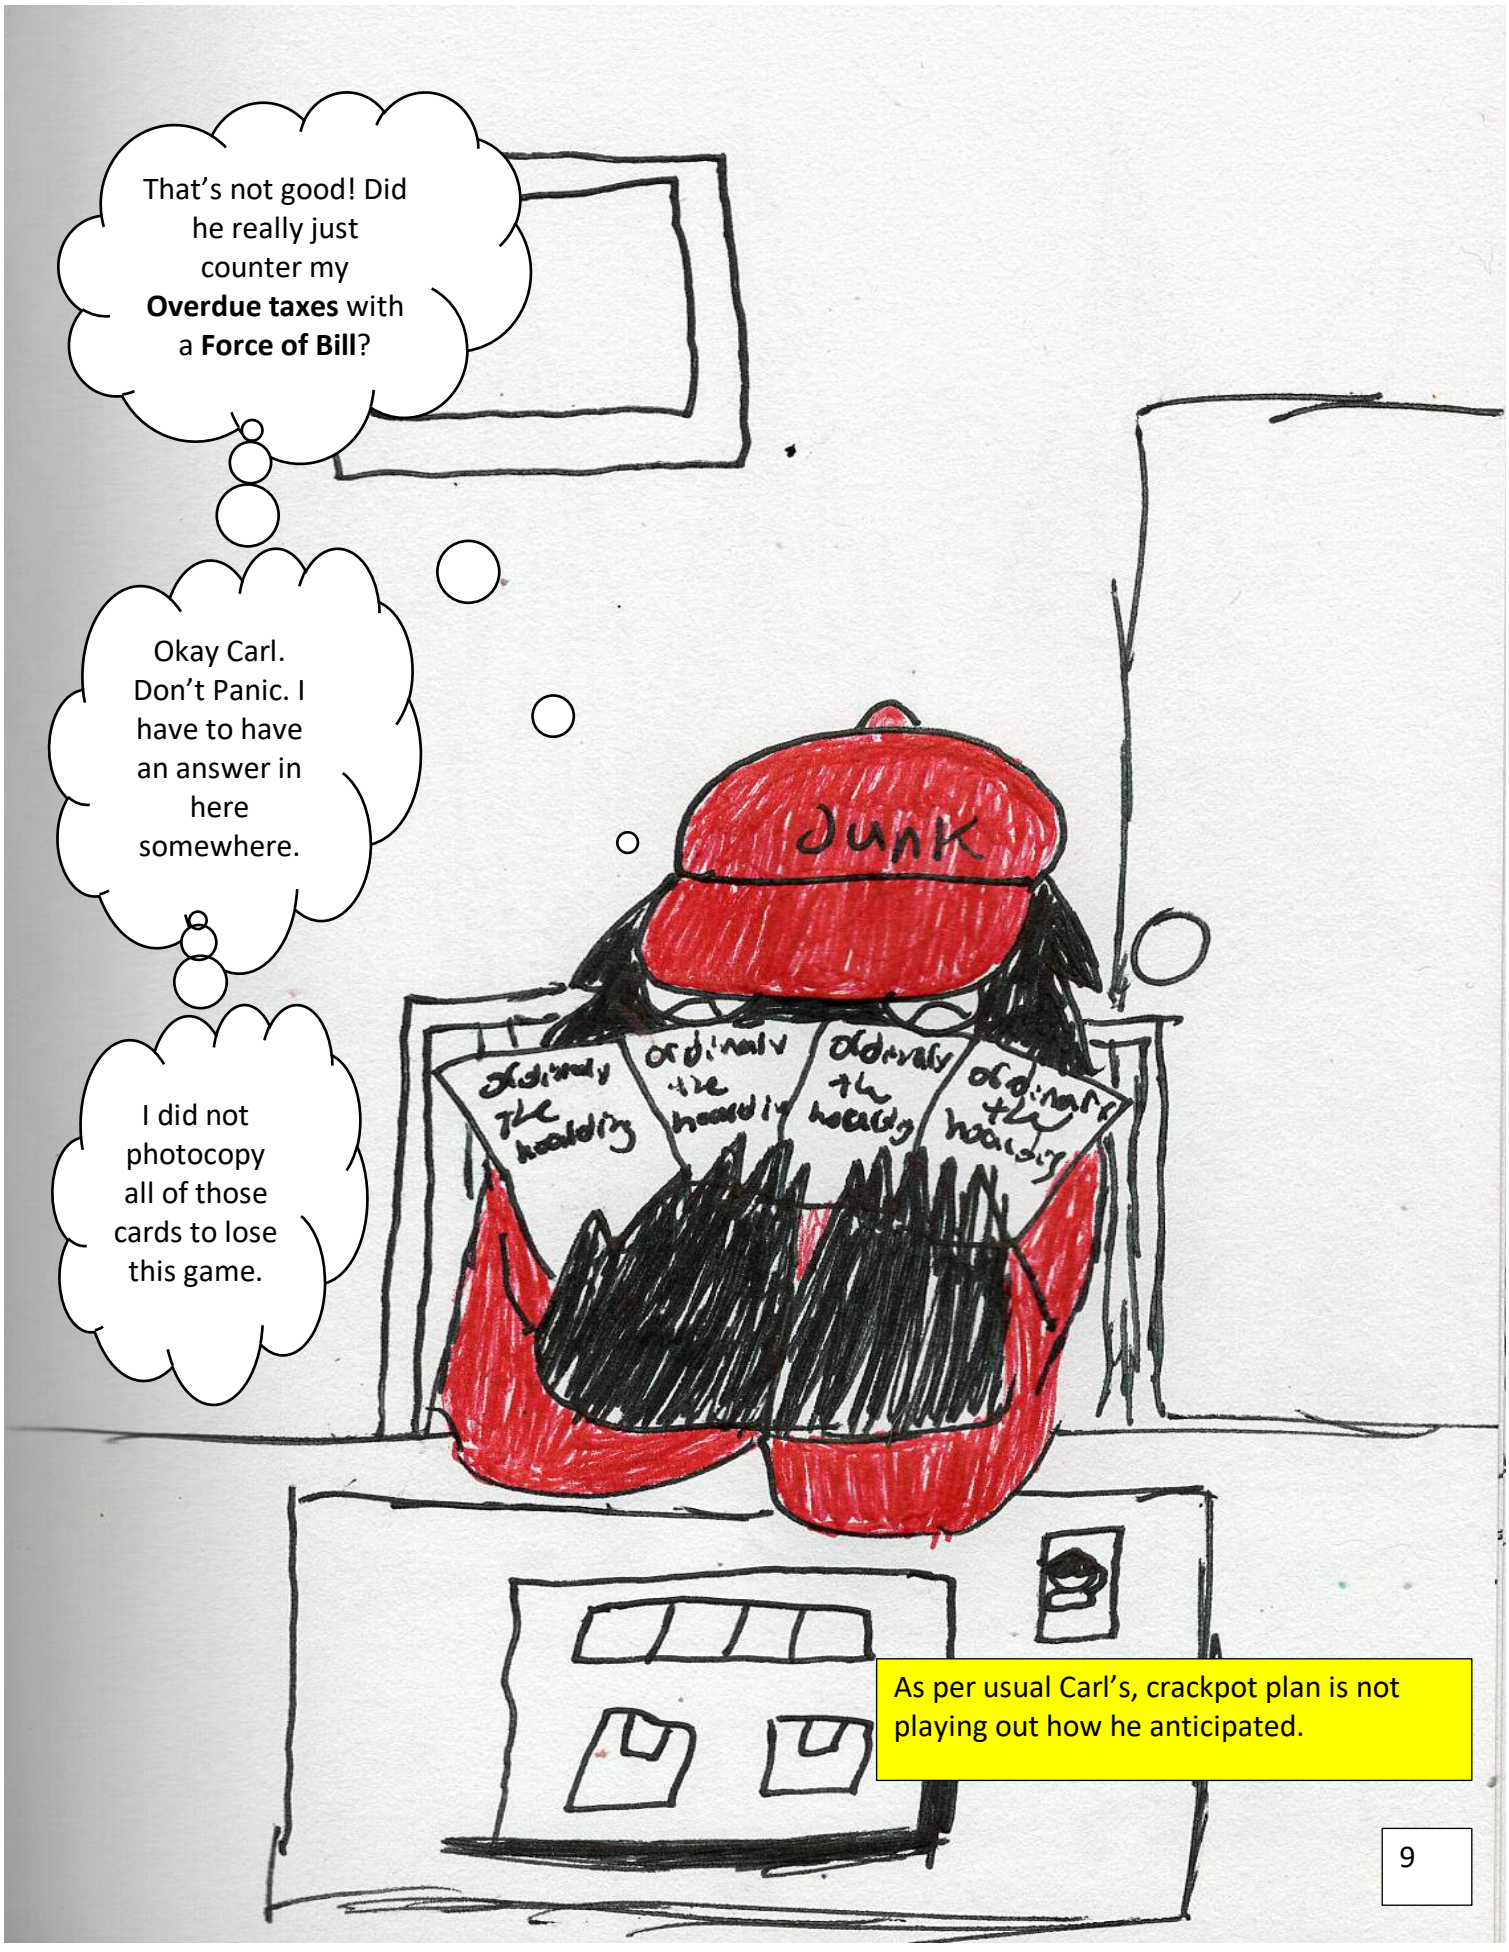
JunK
Carl would have a wing and not a hand. You know because he's a bird. Logistically speaking Bob

Black Coffee is the most efficient resource in the game. There's no way he has an answer to that.
This play should really get this game started off on the right claw for me.
Junk
TRASH
BLACK COFFEE

Just as I suspected, he had no answer for my black coffee.
Now all I have to do is hit him with this overdue tax card, and I'll win the match.
There's no coming back from overdue taxes. Everyone knows that.
JUNK
TRASH



That's not good! Did he really just counter my Overdue taxes with a Force of Bill?
Okay Carl. Don't Panic. I have to have an answer in here somewhere.
I did not photocopy all of those cards to lose this game.
Junk
As per usual Carl's, crackpot plan is not playing out how he anticipated.

Okay. I think I can avoid Chapter 7 Bankruptcy if I can play this offshore account card without it being investigated.
Then I'll play my vintage coin collection card.
Then I'll really be hoarding with fryer.
JunK
I actually believe the statement is "Cooking with fire." I honestly don't know where Carl comes up with these things. He was raised better than that. – Embarrassed Bob

Just as I suspected. He does not have an answer for my Arbitrary Attorney card.
I should be able to embezzle the rest of this game. Ha-ha!
I knew I would come up with something to pay back all of those fines.
Junk
TRASH

Oh no! did he just request an Audit on my Horde?
I'll never survive the accounting process.
That's not fair! He knew that I don't keep any adequate records.
Junk
TRASH

Did he really just investigate my Offshore Account too?
I spent all that time photocopying all of these cards, and he's still looking into my offshore account?
That's ok Carl. Just got to keep my cool for a little bit longer….so I can play out this last card.
I think I've only got one more option in this game.
Junk

Just like that Carl played his last card, and by that I mean he threw all of his newly printed cards in the air, and made a big fuss about losing.

I guess getting really good at Ordinary the Hoarding is not how I'm going to raise enough money to pay my fine.
That was my last good idea. What do I do now?
I just really hope I don't end up really far away, and have to spend a ton of issues trying to get home. That would be lame.
Or even worse someone could put me in a graphic novel. I shiver at the thought.

Carl The Crow in: Spring Forwards
I can't believe it's that time of year again.
I really hate spring forward.
Top five worse days of the year. EASY.
I don't know what's colder. The ground or the reality of this situation.
On second thought, reality is much colder.
THUD!
Why do we even have to do that every year?
I mean what do springs have to do with time?
The whole thing is really foolish if you ask me!
Which no one ever does… I wonder why that is?

The Princess and the Crow

Once upon a time there was an extremely ugly Crow. Not only was the Crow extremely ugly he was also quite a smelly bird. No one liked the Crow. He had only a few friends. This was fine with him. The crow was not really fond of everyone, anyways. The crow went through much of his life this way, not agreeing with others, and spending most of his time alone.

One day the crow stumbled upon a beautiful unicorn in the woods. The Unicorn was playing with a golden bobble, and suddenly she mishandled the ball, and it dropped into a mud puddle that was for plot's sake extremely close by.

"Oh, my I've dropped my gold bobble!" Exclaimed the beautiful Unicorn. "If only some valiant knight would retrieve the bobble from that puddle. Then I would not have to ruin my extremely stylish designer dress."

The Crow who was watching the Unicorn made no move for the bobble in the water. The black bird just continued to sit, and stare at the entire situation that was unfolding around him. The crow finally spoke after several minutes of watching the misfortune unfold. "You know I could get that bobble for you. A little mud does not scare me at all."

"That would be great" replied the Unicorn.

"Now, hold on!" Retorted the crow. "I said I could get you that bobble. Not that I would get you that bobble. Nothing in this life is free princess."

"Oh! Crow! what do you want from me to get the bobble from the puddle!" The beautiful Unicorn exclaimed.

"I will retrieve your bobble, only if you agree to spend a day with me, and give me a kiss after our day together." The Unicorn agreed, and the crow retrieved the bobble from the puddle. The odd pair then spent the day together.

The Unicorn who originally was quite disgusted by the crow eventually ended up really liking the strong willed, and smart bird. At the end of the day, as promised the Unicorn kissed the crow. Nothing happened to the bird, he was still the same ugly, smelly bird he was before the kiss. Still the Unicorn now loved that crow, because of his personality, and not his outward appearance.

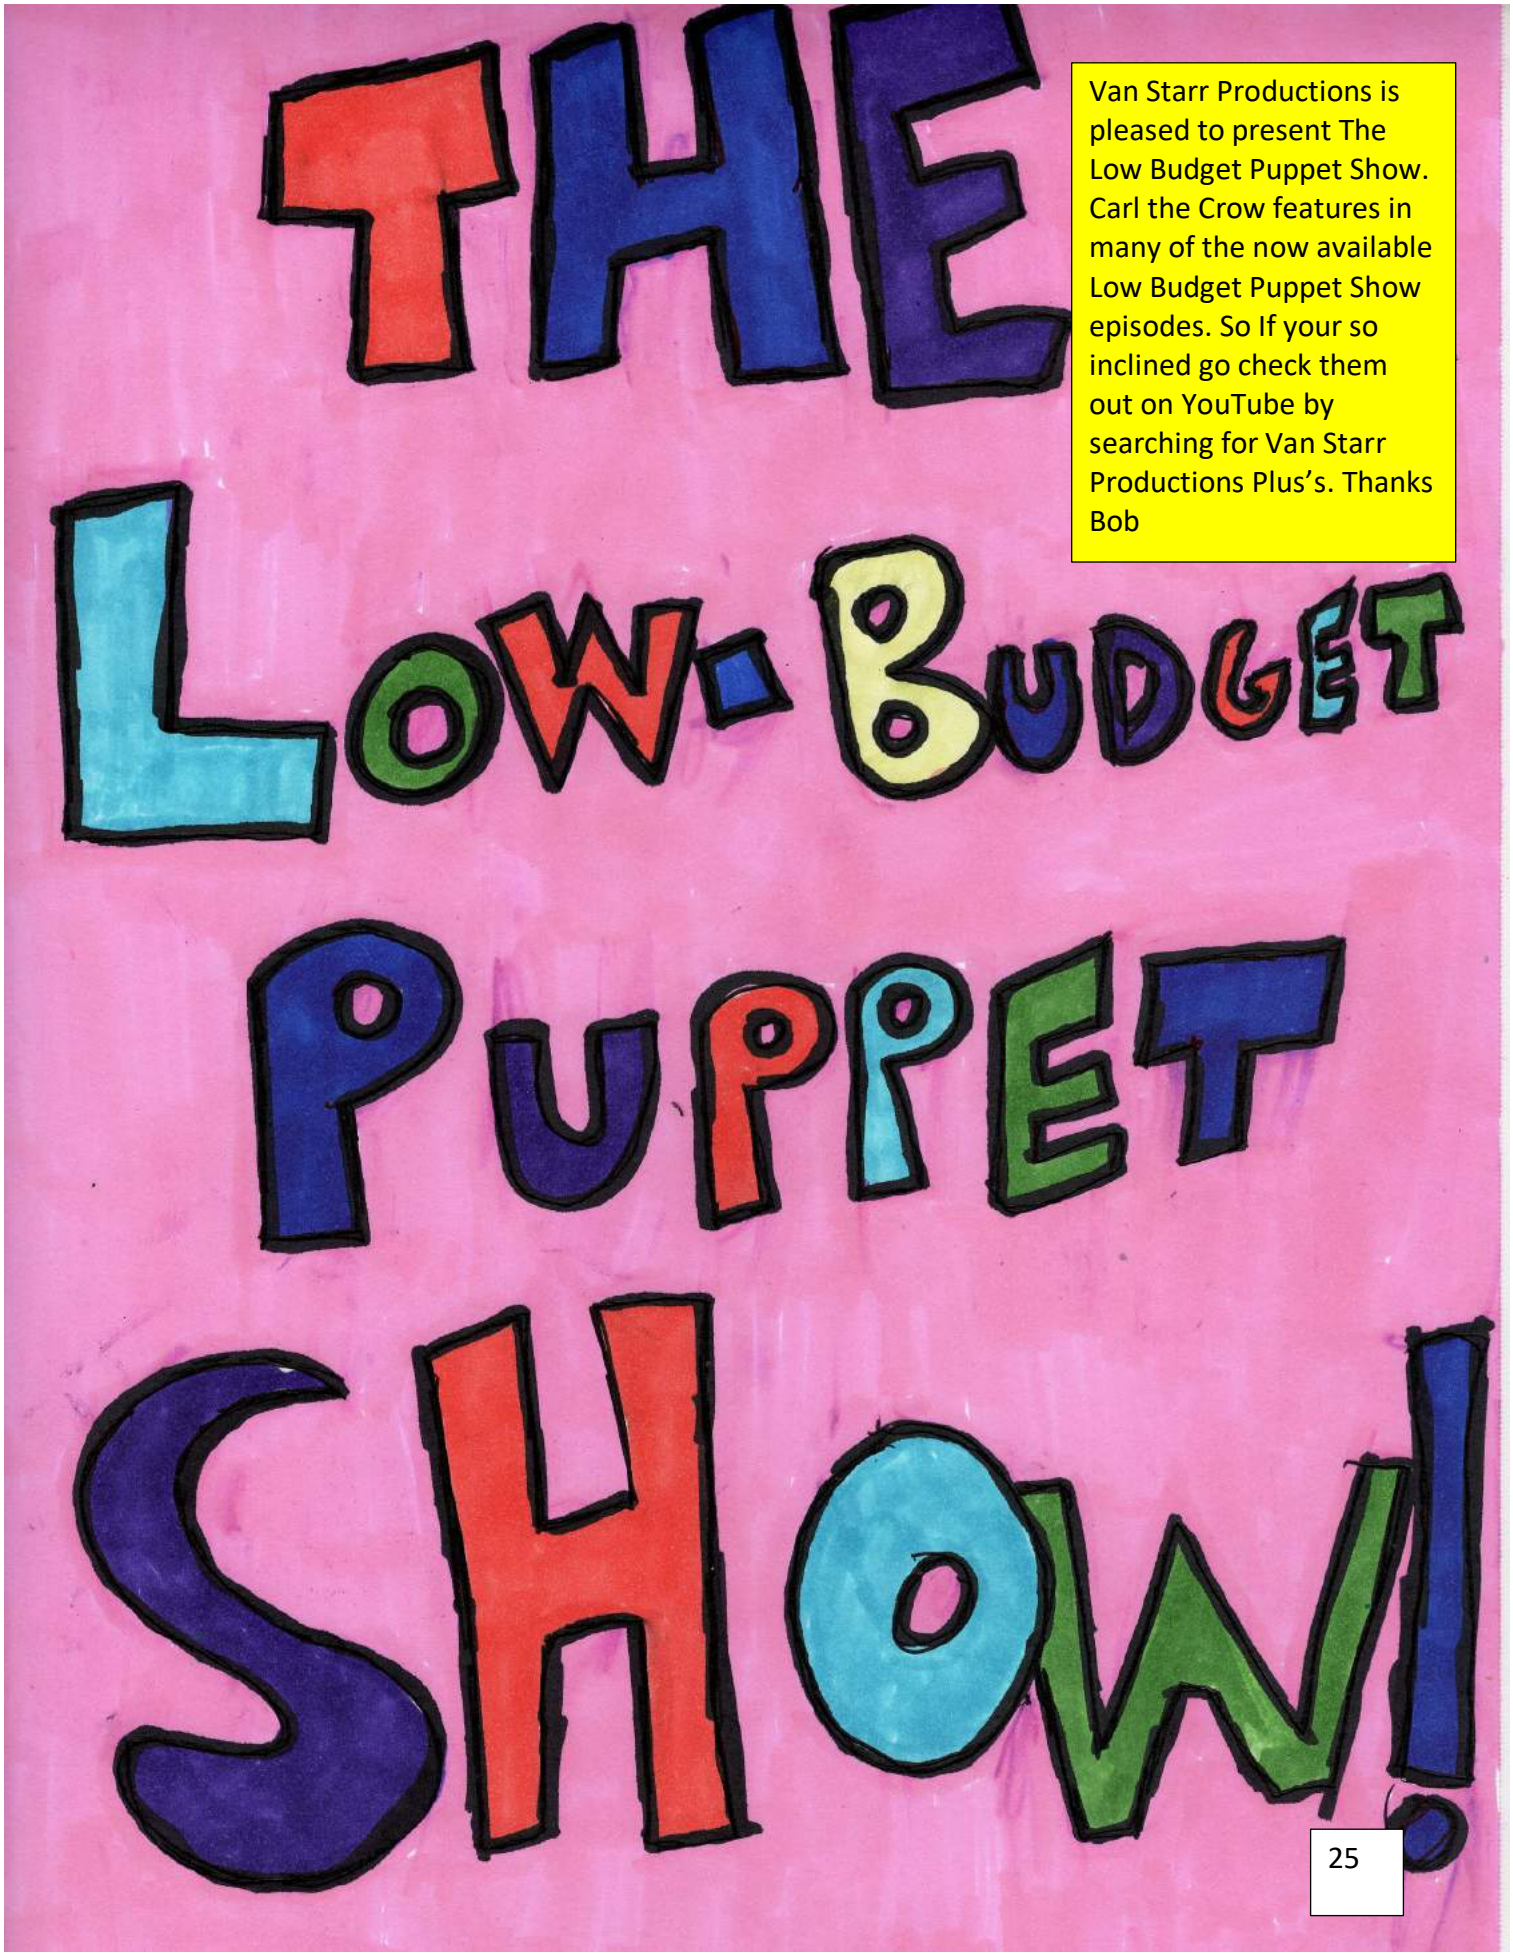
Callow Corvus Book Mark

This is the first official Callow Corvus book mark. This book mark was created for promotional purposes, and many were given away to some of my local fans.

I'll explain to you why this book mark is ironic. Reed has several definitions. Two of those definitions are 1. A piece of grass, and the second definition is for an extremely gullible, and unreliable person.

This book mark is now included in Callow Corvus #7 for you to cut out of the book if you so choose!



Van Starr Productions is pleased to present The Low Budget Puppet Show. Carl the Crow features in many of the now available Low Budget Puppet Show episodes. So If your so inclined go check them out on YouTube by searching for Van Starr Productions Plus's. Thanks Bob
